

If you were to Google "blog stayin' alive stop talking," you would find a post with an unusual complaint: we need to stop talking about the flu and do something about more pressing matters, such as social inequity, which is the root cause of more deaths per year than even the worst H1N1 projections. http://www.healthvsmedicine .blogspot.com is a pubic health blog, and the author's point of view is informed by his training, professional experience and lots of good, solid, peer-reviewed information. Join us on Monday, November 16, at 7:30 p.m. for an unusually sane perspective on health care reform from someone who understands the intersection of public policy and healthcare delivery.

M. Barton Laws, Assistant Professor at Tufts Medical Center and Tufts University School of Medicine, was until recently Senior Investigator in Social Science and Policy at Latin American Health Institute in Boston. He has received research funding from the Robert Wood Johnson and Kaiser Family Foundations, the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Research Program, the Charles Farnsworth Trust, and the Tufts/Brown/Lifespan Center for AIDS Research, as well as NIH. He has been project evaluator for numerous federally funded programs in HIV clinical case management, substance abuse treatment, and mental health services targeting people with HIV. He has had a particular interest in language and culture as factors in the provision of medical services, and physician-

"Sumerian Legends of Gilgamesh and the Great Flood"

Saturday, November 14, 2:30 p.m., in the library at USNH, 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden.

Our studies of Kugel's book on the Tanach have proved so interesting to so many of us that we can't stop just because we've come to the end. David Schafer has proposed to approach some of the same material from a slightly different slant. For starters let's call our new series "The Bible from the Standpoint of Scientific and Historical Analysis." Since the first people to write history, as far as anybody knows, were the Sumerians, we'll start with them. It turns out that they wrote the first story of Noah and the flood—in Sumerian, of course. Not only that, it was imbedded in the first (and some will tell you the best) epic ever written, the heroic life story of Gilgamesh, who seems to have been one of the kings of the Sumerian city of Uruk, around 2700 BCE. We plan to begin our examination of these stories in their historical context in this session. David will bring some handouts, and also plans, in three or four days, to send out a few suggestions for focusing your reading, on the HAC-announce list. (If you're not yet on the list, all you have to do is send an email addressed to hac-announce-request@cthumanist.org with the subject subscribe.)

Book discussion and potluck dinner: "Founding Faith"

The next book we will read is Founding Faith: Providence, Politics, and the Birth of Religious Freedom in America by Steven Waldman. Copies of the printed book and the unabridged audiorecording are available in public libraries and online. (The paperback edition, which has the same content, has a different subtitle.) We will meet Saturday, November 21, 2:30 p.m. until 5:00 p.m. at USNH, 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden. We will have a pot luck dinner until 3:30 p.m. and will then discuss the book. Please bring a dish to share!

"Steven Waldman, a veteran journalist and co-founder of Beliefnet.com, a religious web site, surveys the convictions and legacy of the founders clearly and fairly, with a light touch but a careful eye." —New York Times Book Review

"Well-wrought, well-written and well-reasoned—a welcome infusion of calm good sense into a perennially controversial and relevant subject." –Kirkus Reviews

Opportunities to Help

Columbus House is a shelter for 100 homeless guests, both men and women. There is always a great need for new socks and underwear (mostly in size Large). Please bring your donation to any HAC event. June Schafer is again involved in the annual cooking and delivery of 400 Thanksgiving dinners. Meals on wheels doesn't deliver on Thanksgiving, so a small army of volunteers provides delivery as well as a meal for the homeless. Your tax-deductible check made out to "ICM" would be very helpful, or talk to June about how else you can help!
